STUDY OF LENGTH FREQUENCY OF PELAGIC FISHES WITHIN AND OUTSIDE PFZ FROM THE RATNAGIRI DISTRICT COAST, INDIA

Bhaware B. G.

ABSTRACT

Fishery of 7 pelagic fishes within and outside PFZ during 2015 to 2019 reveals that the average length of these fishes within PFZ is more compare to outside PFZ areas. This study carried out on Mirkarwada harbor along the Maharashtra coast. The fish catch from different fishing gears shows the occurrence of few species every year, these fishes were only considered for the average length during study period. The average length of these pelagic species caught in the purse seine found more from within PFZ than outside PFZ. It can be concluded that the advisories seems beneficial for pelagic feeding fishes.

Keywords: within, outside PFZ, average length frequency, pelagic fishes, Ratnagiri, 2015-2019.

INTRODUCTION

The fisheries sector occupies very important place in the socio-economic development along the coastal length of 167 km off Ratnagiri district. The continental shelf is about 6600 km². At present the number of fishing boats are 4027, out of these mechanized boats are 2464 and non-mechanized boats are 1563. In all 25,286 active fishermen are engaged in fishing activities. Fishing villages are 104 and fish landing centers are 48. The Potential Fishing Zone Advisory dissemination among the fisher community is becoming popular since last five years. In this view of the PFZ areas is more beneficial to the fishermens community for the fishing activities. The PFZ areas fish species were getting more body buildup due to the plenty of food availability, such as chlorophyll, nutrition and food availability Therefore, the total length parameters were determined and comparative study of the total length of fish parameters from within and outside PFZ. In this study the fishes were selected from within and outside PFZ of the landing center Mirkarwada-Ratnagiri. The total 100 number of fish sample were measured each species from within and outside PFZ of major fish landing centres of the Mirakrwada Dist. Ratnagiri for the analysis.

MATERIAL AND METHODS

All the fish samples were collected after hauling is performed by purse-seine operations. The total length of the major fishes are measured and recorded, within and outside PFZ. The pelagic fishes like Harpadon nehereus, Mugil cephalus, Megalaspis cordyla, Rastrelliger kanagurta, Scomberomorous commersson, Sardinella gibbossa and Sardinella longice.. Among the fish catch, most common and important seven fish species were selected for the study of length frequency. Dominancy of these species in different months were also considered.

The following fishing gears are used for the capture of pelagic fishes

Purse-seine: The purse-seine net was introduced along the coast in 1980. The purse-seine net with the mesh size of 10-25 mm and in to extension after dropping gamut of whole net ranging from 500 to 1200 m encirclement around fish shoals and vertical hanging of depth altered from 15 to 40m. The nets are usually operated by the help of mechanized fishing Purse-seine boat with purse-seine gear:

boats with different horse power of the engine. The purse-seine fishery is the most productive and substantiated to be materializing by following the PFZ advisory dissemination in time through fisher than trawl net and gill net fishery at Mirkarwada. The purse seine nets were operated by mechanized vessels with a crew complement of 15 to 25 persons. The hauling operation for each time almost took 2.5 to 3 hours. (Photo.....)

Trawl net: A commencement of trawling in Ratnagiri district initiated in early 1960. Trawl net is the main important fishing gear for exploitation of demersal living resources. The trawl net varying from 30-50 OAL with wooden hull fitted with 40-160 HP engines and power winches. The trawl net is often operated from 15 to 25m long with 20m foot rope and 50-70kg otter boards and 10-20mm cod end mesh size. Trawls are operated with varying at a depth of 10-40m. The standard duration of each haul by trawl net was 1.5 -3 hours. (Photo....)

Abstract: The determination of physico-chemical parameters was carried out to analyses of the changes in water parameters in 3 different sites of within PFZ and Outside PFZ from the coast of karanja, Murud and Srivardhan in Raigad district coast Maharashtra, India. The various parameters like pH, salinity dissolved oxygen (DO), temperature; total hardness (TH) were measured during April, 2018 to March, 2019. The minimum and maximum values of atmospheric and surface water temperature were 25.0-33.5 (0c); pH 7.1-8.5; salinity 30.0-35.0 (0/00) and dissolved oxygen were 4.5-6.2 (ml/l). The minimum and maximum ranges of total hardness, (6.1-7.4 ml/l) were recorded. Results reveal that water parameters like pH, dissolved oxygen (DO), temperature (atmospheric and surface water), chlorides, calcium, total hardness (TH), of Raigad district coasts shows variations from within and outside PFZ during the study period of April, 2018 to March, 2019.

Key Words: Physico-chemical parameters, within PFZ and outside PFZ, PFZ forecast, Raigad coast, West Coast of India.

Introduction

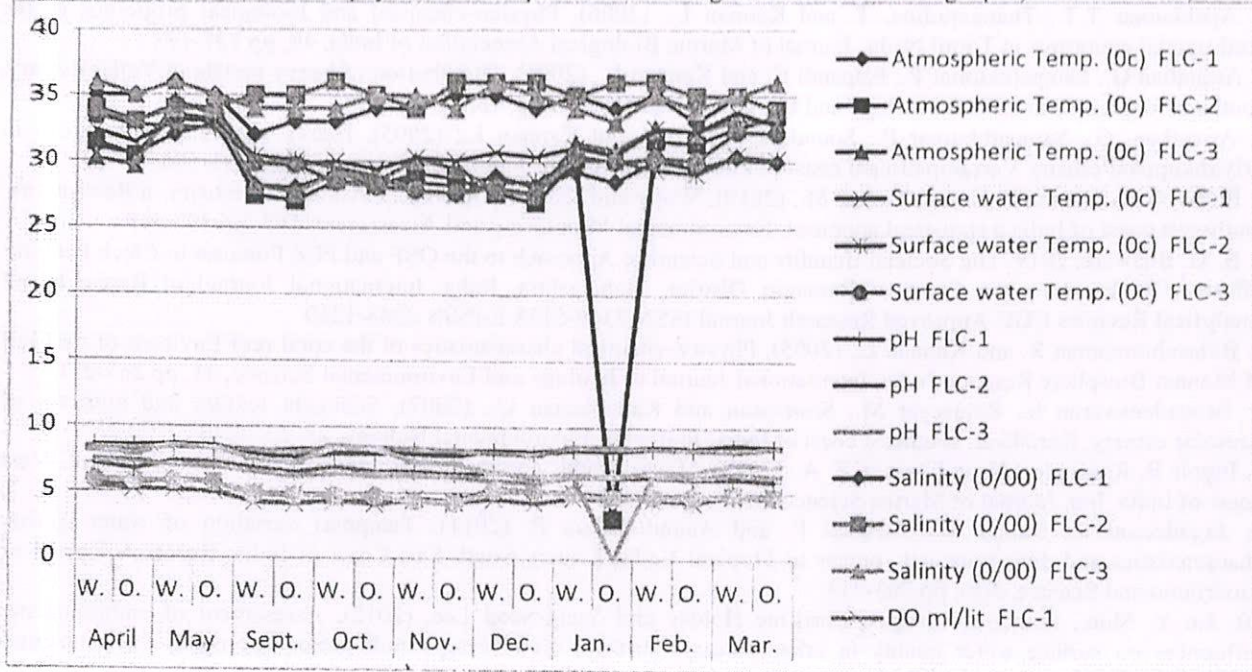

The coast and its adjacent areas on and off shore are an important part of a local ecosystem: the mixture of fresh water and salt water (brackish water) in estuaries provides many nutrients for marine life. Salt marshes and beaches also support a diversity of plants, animals and insects crucial to the food chain. The coast, also known as the coastline or seashore, is the area where land meets the sea or ocean, or a line that forms the boundary between the land and the ocean or a lake. A precise line that can be called a coastline cannot be determined due to the coastline paradox. There are around 620,000 km (372,000 miles) of coastline. The term coastal zone is a region where interaction of the sea and land processes occurs. Both the terms coast and coastal are often used to describe a geographic location or region. The sea coast is a complex environment that plays a key role in biodiversity and in transfer of dissolved and particulate trace metals to the coastal boundary zone worldwide Valença and Santos, 2012); habitats like mangrove zones, salt marshes, mudflats, sea grass, seaward beds are highly productive and play an important role as breeding and nursery grounds for many important species (Ingole et al, 2002; Ajithkumar et al., 2006; Prabhu et al., 2008; Telesh et al., 2010). The sea coast of within PFZ and outside PFZ water exhibit seasonal variations in its physicochemical characteristics and nutrients content depending of physical and biological processes (Subramanian and Mahadevan, 1999; Telesh, 2004; Shridhar et al., 2006; Sarvankumar et al., 2008; Nirmal et al., 2009; Soundarapandian et al., 2009; Babu et al., 2010; Sivadas et al., 2011). In addition, it is well known that human activities like industrialization, urbanization, tourism and domestic waste are affecting to the water quality Ananthan et al., 2005, 2006; Valença and Santos, 2012; Jin et al., 2012). Numerous contamination inputs have been described in relation with the temporal and spatial variations in physico-chemical parameters in several sea coasts from Indian coast (Balasubramanian and Kannan, 2005; Tripathi et al., 2005; Paramasivam and Kannan, 2005; Ajithkumar et al., 2006; Solai and Diwakar, 2007; Saravanakumar et al., 2008; Sankar et al., 2010; Jagadeesan et al., 2011). Actually, the water quality of the sea along the west coast of India are highly disturbed and threatened, encountering problems due to the influx of river, pollution, siltation and erosion, flooding, saltwater intrusion, storm surges and other hazards. Studies of the water quality through the appropriate control measures, and monitoring of diverse quality parameters have become very important and essential to ensure the sustainable development and management of the coastal systems and their resources (Mishra, 2007). Therefore, the study assumption is that to assess the changes of physico-chemical parameters and nutrients in the water of the sea from the within and outside PFZ in the coast of Maharashtra, India.

Materials and methods:

The sea coast is of Karanja situated at (Long. 20.484125 and Lat. 77.486092) Murud situated at (Long. 17 27 10 N and Lat. 70 49 59 E) and in Srivardhan is situated at (Long. 19.990751 and Lat. 72.743675) Raigad, Maharashtra, India. For the present study, three sampling sites were chosen; site 1 Karanja sea coast site 2 Murud coast and site 3 Srivardhan from the within and outside PFZ. Surface water samples were collected from the within and outside PFZ selected locality at monthly interval from April, 2018 to March 2019 for the estimation of physico-chemical parameters and for the analysis of nutrients. Samples were collected in the sterilized polythene bottle, kept immediately in an icebox and brought to the laboratory. The temperature was measured by using a standard centigrade thermometer, salinity was estimated with the help of a refractometer (Atago, Japan) and pH was measured by using Elico Grip pH

Graph. 1: Seasonal variations in physic-chemical parameters of Raigad district coast during April, 2018 to March, 2019

Minimum pH value was observed during the month of June to November which could be related with several factors (fresh water influx, dilution of sea water, low temperature, organic matter decomposition and lower primary productivity). Similar results has been reported in other estuaries of the Indian coast (Bragadeeswaran et al., 2007; Sankar et al., 2010). Salinity is one of the factors that were high during the month of December to May. The higher values of salinity may be due to the low amount of rain fall, higher rate of evaporation and the dominancy of neretic water, while the lower concentration of salinity was recorded in the month of September to November which may be due to heavy rain fall and large quantity of fresh water inflow. Similar trends in the salinity values were recorded by Balasubramanian and Kannan, (2005); Solai and Diwakar, (2007), Soundarapandian et al., (2009); Sankar et al., (2010) in other estuaries of the Indian coast. Total hardness is the measurement of the capacity of water to precipitate soap, chiefly due to the presence of calcium and magnesium in the water; therefore, in the present study is defined as the sum of calcium and magnesium concentration and the total hardness was comparatively higher during the month of September to December, and minimum values were detected in the month of December to May. The accumulation of chloride content was higher in the month of December to June and lower in the month of July to November (monsoon season). Calcium content was higher in the month of November to June and minimum from July to August. In contrast, calcium content appears higher in west coast of India than in the east coast (Sugandhini et al., 1982). Many factors like temperature, salinity, photosynthesis and respiration of plants and animals affect to the dissolution of oxygen. In the present investigation, higher values of dissolved oxygen were recorded during monsoon season (from June to September) which is related to the rainfall and freshwater influx (Govindasamy, et al., 2000; Saravanakumar et al., 2008 and Sankar et al., 2010). The concentration of sodium and potassium was recorded maximum in almost all the sites from December to March, and minimum in the month of June to November. Seasonal variations in total hardness and in the chloride, calcium, magnesium and sodium content could be partially due to the effect of influx of fresh water and rainfall. Altogether, our results indicated that there are not differences in the physico-chemical and nutrient status of the water collected from three different locations, Further investigations related with heavy metals accumulation are necessary to elucidate the quality of the water in the sea. however, preliminary data about the physico-chemical parameters and nutrients in this area would be a useful tool in the future for ecology, biodiversity and culture aspects of the species from the sea. To conclude from present study the physico-chemical parameters were observed highly within PFZ than outside PFZ in Karanja, Murud and Srivardhan sea coast. Therefore, the physico-chemical parameters were observed highly recorded within PFZ than outside PFZ areas and its get benefits for aggregation of fishes.
